The editors of SUURJ would like to thank the many, many people without whom our work would not be possible. Thank you to Dr. Christina Roberts, Director of the Indigenous Peoples Institute, for sharing materials, resources, and time with us as we worked to draft the journal's first land acknowledgment. Thank you to Karen Bystrom, Samy Hamiche, and Veronica Suchodolski for lending us their time and expertise to help us market Volume 6 and increase the journal's social media presence. Thank you to English chairs Charles Tung and Kate Koppelman for supporting the year-long academic program needed to operate the journal. We couldn't have done our work this year without the support of our tireless administrative assistant and budget whiz Shawn Bell—thank you! SUURJ always looks professional and stylish thanks to the incredible design work of SU alum Caleb Hou, and we can't thank him enough for continuing this work when we come calling each year. Rochelle Lundy provides invaluable expertise for SUURJ as our library partner, helping us work with our online publisher, uploading the entire finished volume to ScholarWorks and answering all of our copyright questions. We received generous financial support this year from the Albers School of Business and Economics, the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Science and Engineering, the Lemieux Library, and the University Core. Their support is not only crucial for funding our operations, but also demonstrates a university-wide commitment to interdisciplinary student research. Finally, SUURJ wouldn't exist if not for the ideas, inspiration, and hard work of our founding Chief Faculty Editor, Molly Clark Hillard, and our founding student editorial team, Taylor Martino, Julia McGee, Hannah Rips, Chloe Traynor, and Anya Vindla. SUURJ is truly a team effort, and we are only able to keep publishing because faculty mentors help guide the initial writing of student papers and encourage submission, faculty advisory board members help us select papers to publish, faculty content editors lend their expertise to the content revision of the accepted papers, student editors copyedit the selected papers and help run all journal operations, and student authors trust us with their work.
